Scallop-type nicotinic acetylcholine receptors in Neurospora crassa are involved in regulating the developmental morphogenesis of hyphae and the morphogenesis of aerial hyphae. The biological activity of acetylcholine (ACh) is well known; however, the precise physiological function(s) of ACh at the cellular level is still unknown in several organisms. We isolated ACh-sensitive mutants of Neurospora crassa, whose phenotypes are caused by defects in function of nicotinic acetylcholine receptors (nAChRs). Mutant strains that possess mutations in cha-1 (encoding a receptor component) or cha-2 (encoding an accessory protein) are impaired in developmental morphogenesis of hyphae and aerial hyphae. Both mutants are also defective in the morphogenesis of coiled aerial hyphae. The disruption of the cha-1 gene does not affect chemotropic inhibition of hyphal branching, hyphal tip growth, and formation of a colony dome, nor the development of aerial hyphae. In contrast, the disruption of the cha-2 gene results in a defect in the inhibition of hyphal branching, hyphal tip growth, and formation of a colony dome, which is the same as the phenotypes of both mutants in aerial hyphal development. These results demonstrate that both cha-1 and cha-2 are directly involved in the regulation of developmental morphogenesis and the morphogenesis of aerial hyphae. 2D and 3D environmental modeling of a watershed with complex geology. The existence of a (semi-)undisturbed regional groundwater network in the north of Switzerland has been recently revealed by numerical aquifer modelling [1-UASI, M. Weich, G. Galasch, A. Werner, Geochemical patterns in the hydrological and hydrogeological system of the Swiss Jura, Hydrol. Earth Syst. Sci., 11, 2778 (2011)]. Furthermore, the observations suggest that a regional inversion of groundwater relative to the overlying unsaturated zone controls the flow in the unsaturated zone and may
